

Andre Perry lives in Iowa City where he serves as the Executive Director of The Englert Theatre, a 106-year-old performing arts space in the heart of downtown. He is also the co-founder and producer of the Mission Creek Festival (est. 2006), a week-long exploration of performance, literature, and community events that inhabits established venues as well as non-traditional performance spaces in Iowa City. Perry also collaborated with local partners to create Witching Hour (est. 2015), a two-day fall festival that explores the unknown, discusses creative process, and presents new work across a variety of disciplines. He also plays in the band, The LonelyHearts, and writes personal essays and memoir. His writing has appeared in Granta, Catapult, The Believer, and other journals. His debut collection of essays - Some of Us Are Very Hungry Now - enters the world in November 2019.